On July 4th, President Donald Trump of the United States told us that the United States is exceptional, is the best country in the world, is on the rise, that it is back, that the United States is a civilization that all should aspire to emulate. Is this true? Absolutely not. On this July 4th, what we should be doing is breaking down the reality of the situation in front of us — that the U.S. empire is not only in decline, but it is absolutely abhorred by the majority of the world. And should anybody be surprised by this? The abhorrent actions of the U.S. power elites and how they broker their power and wield it to cause immense suffering, all in the name of hegemony.

We only have to look right now at Iran, where over 20 million people are in the streets of the country to mourn their slain and assassinated leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, and the dozens of other Iranian officials who were killed in the 37-day war that the U.S. and Israel ended up starting. Thousands of Iranians were also killed in that war, including over 168 children in the Manav school strike on February 28th via a U.S. Tomahawk missile. Israeli incursions into Lebanon, the constant strikes on the Lebanese people, amount to a genocide, and the United States has backed this through and through. The same goes for the Gaza genocide that so many have protested over the last several years, a result of U.S. foreign policy.

The United States is on the brink of a nuclear war with Russia, all because the U.S. empire and the Epstein class that back the political class in Washington, that back the intel agencies, that back the Pentagon, that back the military-industrial complex, that sit in the boardrooms of Wall Street and the monopolies that dominate the U.S. imperial system. It is these individuals, these monsters, that have brought us to the brink of nuclear war with Russia, all because they cannot handle the fact that Russia is no longer a country broken and destroyed by the fall of the Soviet Union. It is no longer weak. It is one that seeks to assert itself not to dominate others, but to regain its strength and to forward an independent posture on the world stage and for Russia itself.

That is why the Ukraine conflict was started. That is why in 2014, the United States and NATO backed literal Nazis to take power in Ukraine. And that is why Russia continues to fight this war and is moving toward victory. But the closer that Russia gets to victory, the more we see threats to Russia, the more we see U.S. warnings to Poland that Russia is going to attack it, the more we see Ukraine being given certain kinds of drone technology and missile technology in order to strike deep into Russian territory, and the more we see NATO under U.S. diktats, Europe under U.S. diktats, get more and more aggressive as the so-called NATO summit comes into being in just a few days.

This possibility of nuclear war is very real, and it is because of the United States, which is the only country in the world, remember, that has used a nuclear weapon in the entirety of nuclear weapons history. Never forget that. Never forget that Japan, after this nuclear weapons strike, now today has more U.S. military bases than any other country in the world, and actually celebrated July 4th. It was one of the few other countries that celebrated July 4th as openly as the United States did. This is the reality of the world situation today. The United States acts not as a civilized country.

The United States, under this power elite, this Epstein class, acts like a barbaric country, attempting to ruin the lives of millions of people everywhere. All for what? Not for us. Not for the living standards of the people of the United States. Certainly not for the living standards of people anywhere, because living standards have only declined the longer that the U.S. empire has been allowed to reign. We have to remember, back during the World War II period, it was considered the golden age in the collective West, especially in the United States.

What has happened since then, since the U.S. empire, say since 1991, when it became the only country, the only dominant system in the world where the dollar had free rein and it was considered there was no alternative to it? Well, living standards have declined. Debt has entrapped so many countries around the world, both private and U.S.- and European-backed. And we are now seeing an explosion of poverty around the world. All the while, the U.S. tries to contain and saber-rattle with the one country in the world, China, with the technological and economic means to provide real cooperation and assistance to Global South countries and impoverished countries seeking to get out of their current predicament.

They claim, the Epstein class does, that China is the debt trap, that China is the one seeking expansion. It's the United States that has dead bodies, skeletons, mass graves in its wake. It is the United States that has the history of committing actual genocide, not just on its shores during its founding period, not just against the Indigenous people, not just against the enslaved population during the period of enslavement, but even afterward. Just check out the Philippines in the early 20th century, late 19th century. Check out what happened to Vietnam, what happened to Korea.

These were documented genocides, and we could say that killing over 500,000 Iraqis by sanctions alone, which Madeleine Albright, the U.S. Secretary of State at that time, said was worth it in the early 1990s.

We could say that that's genocide as well. So is this something that we should be proud of? Should we take Donald Trump's word for it, or should we get angry? And I think the answer is we should be angry now. The current situation in the world has huge ramifications for what is happening in the United States. The U.S. is consistently going down the road of a declining empire. It is political chaos inside. It is the inability of the United States' political class to address the needs of the people. And it is the people still suffering under stress, under absolutely disastrous conditions, trying to figure out how exactly to address these problems for themselves. And it has not been easy. But the fact of the matter is, time is running out.

The fact of the matter is that the confrontation the United States empire is seeking with the bigger rising countries of the world, of the Global South, is coming to a head not just with Iran, because that war is not over. This war will likely last many, many years. We will see the United States and Israel strike Iran again. Iran certainly knows this. Iran has made warnings so many times before. And the fact is that not only will a war on Iran happen again, but the real aims for the war on Iran will come out slowly but surely. In many cases, they already have. We know that Iran is the key to Eurasia. We know that Iran is a major partner to Russia and China. We should know that the ultimate goal and aim of the U.S. empire is to ensure that China never becomes as powerful as it already is becoming, that it is never able to become the number one economy in GDP terms in the world.

But that is fast happening. In the next 10 to 15 years, it is likely that even in GDP terms, China will become the biggest economy in the world. But it's not just the economy of China that scares the United States' Epstein class so much. It is the fact that China's huge, massive, technologically superior economy will develop the means for other countries to not only become strong themselves, but to cooperate in ways that ultimately exclude the United States—not just the U.S. dollar, but the U.S. as an entity itself. Because let's be honest, the U.S. empire cannot cooperate with other countries. We use this term on this show a lot: agreement incapable. The U.S. is not capable of cooperating with other countries.

It only knows how to dominate. The Epstein class views every country in the world as subservient to it. It even views its so-called partners as that, including Europe and including Israel. When Donald Trump says he is in charge, you better believe that the Epstein class believes otherwise. Those who wield power in the United States believe they are in charge of Israel, or they view Israel as simply an appendage of the U.S. empire. We have to get away from these arguments and debates about Israel and the United States—who controls who. In many respects, these are two cheeks, as George Galloway says, of the same backside. They are working for the same system of empire that is ravaging the world today.

But there is hope. Because the more the U.S. declines, the more violent it becomes. But the more violent it becomes, the more the world is seeking an alternative. On this July 4th, we are seeing actual moves toward freedom that people are taking to better their situation all around the world. Cuba's reforms against the U.S. blockade have been lambasted by these arrogant lefties and these arrogant social media personalities as an attempt to destroy Cuba's socialist project. But in truth, what Cuba's reforms are doing is trying to accelerate a process where they are free of U.S. domination, where they can build up their productive forces to meet their needs.

So many people have called Iran and the Iranian government and all this traitors to their own cause because they are now talking to the United States about the concessions that are involved in the memorandum of understanding. But let's be quite clear: if Iran can gain concessions from the United States, no matter how small or even temporary, like the lifting of oil sanctions, that will benefit the Iranian people, and the Iranian government has every right to do what is to the benefit of the Iranian people. Does that mean Cuba is foregoing its own sovereign process of development? No. Does that mean that the Iranian government is foregoing its commitment to the Iranian people and protecting their interests and defending them from the aggression of the United States and Israel? No. We have to stop thinking in these absolute binaries and economies.

We have to purge the powerful, incessant, and repeated narratives of the U.S. intelligence and Israeli intelligence communities telling us that people in the world who are actually trying to seek their own kind of freedom are our enemies or are doing it incorrectly, and that we deserve to be the ones to tell them how to do it correctly. That is the imperial mentality at work. That is what is truly a problem, because if we believe that we are so superior to countries around the world and should tell them what to do, even those of us who are sympathetic to their causes, well, then how are we going to resolve the issues right in front of us, right as we look in the mirror, right as we look out the window in our own circumstances? Because ultimately, geopolitics is not a game. Geopolitics is not simply a chessboard where pieces are being moved around and where there are checkmates, defeats, wins, and losses.

Geopolitics is literally life. Geopolitics is breathing. It is the air that we breathe. It is everything that we do. It is the class war on a global scale. And we have to be vigilant that on this July 4th, when the Trump administration, Donald Trump himself, is trying to douse us and pour on us the acid of American exceptionalism, that we arm ourselves with something a lot more powerful, and that is knowledge, that is consciousness, that is an understanding of how the world actually works and what the U.S. empire's role truly is in it. Now, truthfully, I don't really do monologues all that often. I do individual shows once in a while, but sometimes I have to get on here and let you know my true feelings on this day, because, you know, even though American people, Westerners, the vast majority of them, have no direct role in the ways in which the U.S. empire behaves.

The Epstein class is a very secretive class. It is one that dominates the halls of power. And many of us don't have any access to those halls of power. Actually, many of us not only don't have access to those halls of power, but are directly abused, oppressed, and exploited by them. But nonetheless, we do have the unfortunate reality of being constantly told that this is what represents us — the U. S. empire, its myths, its lies, its constant rebranding and reframing of what reality is.

And in that sense, the rest of the world looks at people in the United States differently, as bearing some kind of responsibility for the actions of their government. And if they don't view them as having a responsibility for the actions of their government, the fact of the matter is that we have to deal every day with how the actions of our government ultimately reflect on us, right? And that leads to what? It leads to guilt. But don't be guilty. Don't be guilty, because guilt ultimately leads to paralysis. What we should be is angry. What we should be is furious. What we should be is absolutely steadfast in our determination to ensure that one day we live in a world where the Trumps of the world, the Obamas of the world, the Bidens of the world, the Epstein class all over, those who sit in the boardrooms of the biggest monopolies, corporations, the military-industrial complex, and Wall Street — that they do not have the power to dominate the world as they do.

That should be what our determination is. The rest of the world is vying for their own kind of project. That is why we cover multipolarity here. That is why we pay close attention to the developments on the battlefield in Ukraine, because once Russia wins that war, it will be a major blow to the aims of the U.S. empire's Cold War. The truth is that that blow has already been landed in many respects because Russia shows no sign of collapse. But when that victory is finally sealed, when it is written in the history books, it will mark a major defeat overall for the U.S. empire. The same goes for China. There is absolutely no flashpoint right now where the U.S. empire can truly provoke China into a disastrous war.

But nonetheless, there will be one. You have to understand that the Epstein class is not rational, and it is not one that says it's going to give up its power willingly or peacefully. China will certainly gain its power peacefully from here on out. Its technological development, its economic development, and its foreign policy initiatives are not based on the aims, the ideals, and the behaviors of the U.S. empire. They're based on something quite different. They're based on things like mutual cooperation, and they're based on the idea that foreign policy and development are not a zero-sum game. It is one that has to be worked on together.

Now, that's not always perfect, and it doesn't always end up exactly how China or anyone else would want it to end up as. But it is by far a different model from the one of domination that we see by the United States. So on this July 4th, just remember that humanity is not American exceptionalism. American exceptionalism is not even possible until the U.S. empire is not able to dictate what a definition of America really is. We have to come to terms with history. We have to come to terms with reality. We have to come to terms with the true state of the present situation.

And that is that the U.S. empire, the Epstein class, these super rich and corrupt and absolutely abhorrent individuals, some of them can be counted on a handful, are hoping that their empire's collapse will lead them to greater riches in the short term and an escape valve in the long term. And what do I mean by that? That there's some kind of route they can take, whether in their bunkers, some kind of escape, some kind of war that will end it all, something. I mean, there are people in the Epstein class this insane, right, that see the end of times actually here. And they are trying to rapidly get whatever they can, take whatever they can, and leave us with absolutely nothing left. This is the struggle that humanity finds itself in right now.

And on this July 4th, especially for my viewers in the United States, but really for my viewers in the collective West and really for my viewers anywhere, just understand that we're only going to get out of this together. We're only going to get out of this by supporting each other. We're only going to get out of this not through nihilism, not through despair, but through optimism rooted in a change of behavior and a change of actions that reflect what we truly want our values to be. Now, oftentimes I have my friend Brian Berletic on the show, and he says we have to invest in the multipolar world. And how do we really do that? Because it's hard, given the currency situation, given the economic disparities and all of that that exists for those who live in the West, to simply invest in multipolarity.

But one thing we can do is we can invest in countering U.S. propaganda. We can invest in understanding people who are building a multipolar world better. We can invest in understanding the struggles and the plights of our brothers, our sisters, and our comrades around the world in their common humanity with us. We can better understand them. We can better understand how we can help them. And we can also better understand how we need to help ourselves in order to be of true service to them. Because truthfully, when you have over half the population in the United States making under $30,000 a year, when you have trillions of dollars worth of student debt, health care debt...

You have millions of people who have been incarcerated, charged with a felony. When you have so many people stripped of their rights and their ability to economically and politically sustain themselves in the United States, you have a massively disempowered, disenfranchised population. You have racial divisions, racism. You have scapegoating. You have social incohesion. You have mass shootings. You have dislocation. You have all of these things. It's really difficult to imagine solidarity being worked out on a massive scale, so we've got a lot of work to do in the United States. We're starting out from negative one here, but the hope lies in the fact that there are billions around the world trying to build something different. There is a resistance. There are resistance forces inside of Lebanon right now pushing back an Israeli regime that is on a slaughter rampage.

And we have to understand the Palestinian resistance, the Lebanese resistance, the axis of resistance as a whole has absolutely won enormous achievements in this three-plus-year period that it has culminated in. The successful pushback of the U.S.-Israeli regimes by Iran, a successful victory, the forcing of the U.S. and Israel to retreat even for a moment is a massive victory when you are talking about the nuclear-armed military colossus that is supposed to be the U.S. empire. China on the rise, Russia on the rise, Iran on the rise, and truthfully a multipolar world order, and the aim of a dollarless world, or at least a world free from dollar dominion, that has all accelerated in recent years.

So don't despair. Understand that we are actually moving forward in humanity, and that the Epstein class is a tiny fraction of the population. They just so happen to own some of the most influential, biggest institutions — the ones that make the money go around, and the ones that, of course, also influence culture, also influence our understanding of how the world works. That can be daunting, but they want us in despair. They want us on this July 4th to simply barbecue, to simply eat our hearts out, to continue to put our heads down, and, of course, to suffer all of the various stressors and absolute difficulties and challenges of what day-to-day life is wherever we are.

And that is ultimately where we're going to have to connect to others at the end of the day. We're going to have to stop walking by and scorning the homeless individuals on the streets of U.S. cities. We're going to have to stop scapegoating migrants. We're going to have to stop looking at people who have been incarcerated as prisoners. We're going to have to stop looking at people who make less money as simply poor and worthless. We're going to have to stop looking at people who are mentally ill as blights on our society. We're going to have to stop looking at people around the world as potential enemies. It's all connected, everybody. It's all connected.

And we have to begin to have dignity, not just in ourselves, but in how we relate to others in this larger project called multipolarity. That is my message to you on July 4th. I hope that you ultimately have some time to reflect on what it all means. I hope that you have strapped in and that you are buckled up for what is going to be a bumpy ride. And on this channel, we are going to cover that bumpy ride worldwide. This is a long-haul project, one that I have to thank everyone for helping make sustainable for me, to be able to continue to get out this kind of message to you and to a wider audience. Until next time, everyone, peace out.
